

Team,

By now, many of you have heard that the future of Knowledge magazine rests solely online. This step, while difficult, is in line with DoD guidance regarding the sister services' flagship publications, and an increasing number of branch- and command-oriented magazines and newsletters are making the transition from hard copy to the Internet. We had planned for Knowledge to migrate to an enhanced, online-only version this July, but recent budget shortfalls have necessitated that we cease printing with the February 2013 issue.

The new and improved USACRC and Knowledge websites are still on track, but until both are fully functional, you can get all the useful safety content you've become accustomed to at <https://safety.army.mil>. For now, nothing about the online version will change — individual stories will still appear in a digital table of contents for "clickability," and the full magazine will be available in .pdf format for easy printing. We'll roll out updates as they become available, so check back often to see what we're doing now and planning for the future.

Thank you all for your patience as we develop the road ahead. I'm sure many of you can commiserate during these trying fiscal times, but I have no doubt we will emerge from them better than before.

Army Safe is Army Strong!
